Crude build, product draw expected as war lingers and dominates

We are forecasting US crude inventories up 2.9 MM BBL for the week ending Mar. 27. This follows a 6.9 MM BBL build in the prior week, with the crude balance realizing slightly looser than our expectations.

For the week ending 3/27, from refineries, we look for a moderate reduction in crude runs (-0.4 MBD); timing of turnarounds remains a key variable in this week's crude balance. Among net imports, we model a meaningful decrease, with exports sharply higher (+0.8 MBD) and imports down slightly (-0.1 MBD) on a nominal basis. Timing of cargoes remains a source of potential volatility in the weekly crude balance. From implied domestic supply (prod.+adj.+transfers), we look for a modest reduction (-0.2 MBD). Rounding out the picture, we anticipate SPR draws beginning the week ending 3/27 at a total of ~0.4 MM BBL.

Among products, we look for gasoline (-1.0 MM BBL) and jet stocks (-0.4 MM BBL) modestly lower alongside a healthy distillate draw (-3.6 MM BBL). We model implied demand for these three products at ~14.3 MBD for the week ending March 27.
